

Great Misadventures: Bad Ideas That Led to Big Disasters

BY JEFFREY H. RIEGER AND ROBERT L. STONE

It's not always easy to tell when a new idea is destined for greatness or disaster.

Take the case of the Hindenburg, the most famous airship ever built. It was a massive, graceful dirigible, the pride of Germany. When it first took to the air in 1931, it was the height of prestige. Its passengers were celebrities, and its crews were heroes. In just four years, however, the Hindenburg would become synonymous with disaster. In 1937, it exploded over New Jersey, killing all 36 people on board. But before that happened, many other dirigibles had been flying safely for decades. What made the Hindenburg so unique?

It's a question that's been asked since the Hindenburg disaster. And it's a question that's important for us today. As we look at the challenges ahead, it's important to remember that many of the problems we face are not new. They've been around for a long time, and they've been solved before. But sometimes, we forget that. And when we do, we can make mistakes that lead to big disasters.

That's why it's important to learn from history. By studying the successes and failures of the past, we can better understand the challenges we face today. And by doing so, we can avoid making the same mistakes again. After all, as the Hindenburg disaster proved, sometimes the best way to prevent a disaster is to learn from one.
