Building upon studies on the relationship between social support and health, this study examined the relationship between social support and health in a sample of older adults. The results of this study suggest that social support is a significant predictor of health in older adults. This finding is consistent with previous research that has shown that social support is a key factor in the health and well-being of older adults. The results of this study also suggest that social support is a modifiable factor, which means that it can be improved through interventions. This finding has important implications for the development of interventions to improve the health and well-being of older adults. Future research should continue to explore the relationship between social support and health in older adults, and should also focus on developing interventions to improve social support in older adults.
