Journal of Thought, Fall-Winter 2010

Introduction

A growing number of scholars consider spirituality to be a critical component of effective teaching, teacher leadership, and dynamic organizational life. We share this view and our particular interest lies in understanding the connections between teachers' perceptions of themselves as spiritual beings and leaders and the dispositions of honesty (truthfulness and fairness in dealing with others), humility (modesty in behavior and attitude and a genuine willingness to learn), and a commitment to service to others (assisting or benefiting others).
