Geography Of Multinational Firms Vol 12 Economics Of Science Technology And Innovation:

The Geography of Multinational Firms Pontus Braunerhjelm, Karolina Ekholm, 2012-12-06 Pontus Braunerhjelm and Karolina Ekholm Over recent decades foreign direct investment FDI has become a major force in the global economy The geographical pattern of capital formation trade and technological spillovers across countries and regions are to an increasing extent determined by the strategies chosen by multinational firms MNFs Between 1982 and 1994 the rate of growth of the global FDI stock was more than twice that of gross fixed capital formation the growth of sales by foreign affiliates of multinational firms well exceeded that of world exports and by 1994 the MNFs accounted for approximately 6 percent of world output United Nations 1997 pp xv xvi The overall mechanisms behind this rapid internationalization in terms of multinational production have been attributed to the dismantling of trade barriers and the deregulation of capital markets together with the advances in information technology that have facilitated the coordination and monitoring of internationally dispersed production This development carries two important implications First firms operate in markets characterized by much tougher competition than only a decade ago and second countries and regions are involved in competition for production to a much larger extent than before This book addresses questions related to the location and geographical dispersion of the activities by multinational firms a topic which has become of increasing concern to policy makers

The Geography of International Investment Howard J. Shatz, Anthony Venables, 2000 Multinationals have become increasingly important to the world economy Overseas production by U S affiliates is three times U S exports for example Who is investing where for sales where
