

Chemung uphantenia (U. chemungensis).

The specimen, from which the very remarkable figure represented on wood-cut 50 was copied, is in the State Collection. It was found near the south end of the Ithaca and Owego railroad, by Mr. Leech, the former engineer of that road, who loaned it to the State, subject to his order. The wood-cut exhibits the whole length of the fossil, as it exists in the specimen. It consists of a series of broad rays, very thin, almost wholly superficial, which diverge from a common centre; the breadth of rays enlarging for a certain distance from the point of departure, beyond which they are slightly variable. These rays are crossed by a second series, parallel to each other, the whole compressed together, resembling the geographic lines of a globe; and were they lines and not surfaces, they would be perfectly comparative excepting for the distances between the two series. Having the appearance of woven tape, it has been named Uphantenia, from ὑφαντα, woven, and tēnia, tape, and specifically chemungensis, after the rock in which it is found.
