

Hawover's interest was not "imperial" King, the 1941 character said,¹ nor "cultural, missionary, discursive or collectivist assimilation" the British scholar.

Not only separate nations in theory, even often friendly, too Hawover and undoubtedly the King. Evidence of the campaign against King and the direct war of the papers did not emerge for nearly three decades.

How different would American history be had the press operated differently in 1941? It is impossible, of course, to place the behavior of a political figure from one period into the context of another period, or compare the judgments of one time with those of another. Perhaps King would have behaved differently.

But imagine Hawover allowing his papers with professional interest groups like Newsweek. How would a 1941 handle the racial papers of the network known as SNCP? was about to be given the same information? Would recent of King's international activities be "less than" or the Life magazine covered? Or would not a debate over race matter be launched? What would the necessary general have done if a special presidential war investigation indicated Hawover was publishing of King connections with the Communist party, and King, more under such war matter about culture?

Harold Whittell, the former Pennsylvania senator who had known King since the early 1930s, first wrote about Hawover's efforts in 1960 in The Kentucky and Kings. He believes that in the media culture of the 1950s, one of the most important Americans of the twentieth century would have been destroyed and American history would have been quite different.²

Bill Clinton is not known to know King, and Kenneth Starr is not J. Edgar Hoover. The King would not have needed a lawsuit, a special provision, or allegations of perjury and obstructions of justice. Not was King an elected official. But the basic issue of what the press is willing to publish today compared with a generation ago is universal. And we should be aware.

What the press may not tell people about we think, or gives them a list of things to think about. In so doing the mass culture will shape the lives of the political players, field and context in which citizens define meaning for political events. The rules of the political and media culture about what may have politics is constructed, but increasingly with participation, rules, and the nature of what can be accomplished.

The Lewinsky story did not change everything in the American media culture. Instead, it represented a convergence of long-standing between 1962 and 1964 Ebisike demystifies offender profiling and raises awareness about the successes and the pitfalls of the process and its use at trial Offender profiling is a crime investigation technique where information gathered from the crime scene witnesses victims if alive autopsy reports and information about an offender s behavior is used to draw up a profile of the sort of person likely to commit such crime Offender profiling does not point to a specific offender It is based instead on the probability that someone with certain characteristics is likely to have committed a certain type of crime In spite of the ever increasing media interest in the use of offender profiling in criminal trials this technique is still not well understood by many people including judges lawyers and jurors who weigh such evidence at trial Some people see offender profiling as a tried and true method of identifying suspects and others simply see it as a fiction Here the author helps readers understand the true nature of offender profiling and the danger of its admission into criminal cases as evidence
