Recent years have seen a renewed interest in Thomas Hardy and his works, and as a result of the publication of the Hardy Monographs the Editor has been receiving an ever increasing mail from Hardy students seeking answers to a variety of questions. The most frequent questions relate to the identification of Hardy's fictitious place names. This pamphlet seeks to satisfy that need.

The identifications of the locations are, with thirteen exceptions, which are indicated, derived solely from Hermann Lea's Thomas Hardy's Wessex, 1913, and Thomas Hardy Through the Camera's Eye (monograph no. 20 in this series). In both cases all the identifications are by Hardy, although recorded by Lea, and must be regarded as definitive.

As will be seen from the list, in the case of several localities, Hardy himself was uncertain which was the original place in mind when he identified the made-names for Lea, also it must be remembered that Hardy sometimes in his writings transferred an identifiable building to another district and combined into one building the different architectural features of two buildings. This transposition makes exact identification impossible in some cases.

Pilgrims making the Hardy round should provide themselves with a series of the Popular Edition "one-inch" ordnance maps of Great Britain. Sheets 165, 166, 167, 168, 174, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180 and 185 are specially useful, 178 covers the Dorchester area.
