

Bisexuality, Gaia, Eros: Portals to the Arts of Loving

SERENA ANDERLINI-D'ONOFRIO

University of Puerto Rico, Mayaguez, Puerto Rico

This article presents bisexuality as a portal to the arts of loving where Eros, the energy of love, is recognized as what makes Gaia, the third planet Earth, alive. It is a reflection on the author's experience as a keynote speaker at BiReCon, and as a participant in BiReCon and BiCon.¹ The article is organized into three sections. The Preamble muses about how bisexuality manifests today, the current status of the bisexual movement, and how bisexuals (bis) are positioned within lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender (LGBT) communities, their institutions and in mainstream society. In this first section the author reflects upon her experience at the events. Addressing the Audience is a rendition of her actual keynote address. This second section focuses on why it's key at this time to see bisexuality as a portal to a world that is more eco-friendly and erotophilic. By way of Annie Sprinkle's evolving work, the section establishes continuity between bisexuality and ecosexuality. The author also uses her own experience of bisexual erasure at the French libertine resort of Cap d'Agde to encourage more research and education about bisexuality and the multiple contexts where it manifests. The address also invites readers to imagine the world behind this portal, where a paradigm shift has already occurred. Love is considered an art, Gaia is recognized as the 'gay' planet, the homo/betero divide has disappeared, and the energy of Eros circulates beyond socially constructed binaries. The third section or Conclusion suggests ways to initiate this shift by considering 'organic bisexuality' and 'bolistic sexual health.'
