Financial Evaluation Of Environmental Investments:

Financial Evaluation of Environmental Investments Tuula Moilanen, Christopher Martin, 1996 Traditional ways of analyzing investments like net present value or payback calculations do not deal adequately with environmental issues Future liabilities and the long time scale over which a product or process has an impact on the environment are not generally included and risk is not incorporated properly This text takes a holistic view of decision making The authors advance a methodology which puts the expected monetary values of different investment and risk scenarios into a mathematical model Features of the model are a wider set of cost benefits a disciplined approach to risk and uncertainty a consideration of the environmental aspects of every facet of an investment quantification of less tangible things like corporate image and future liabilities and a strict treatment of items like pollution monitoring that have been passed off as overheads Case studies and examples of analysis to help you put it all into practice are included Financial Evaluation of Environmental Investments
