The tribe Lebiini includes a large number of species which have a generally rectangular outline and are somewhat flattened. The elytra of many are obliquely truncated. Many are arboreal, living on the foliage or on the bark of trees. The genus Catascopus includes a number of species which live on and under the bark of dead trees. Most of them are handsome, shining, blue-green or purple in color and quite large in size, ranging from 10 to 20 mm. They have prominent eyes and long legs and are very active insects, quickly running for cover when a piece of bark is pulled from a log, and flying readily if cornered. C. elegans Weber is 10 mm long and is a metallic green color. It is very common in lowland rain forest, whilst C. wallacei Saunders has rather purplish colored elytra with a bright coppery red prothorax. It is 18 mm long and seems to be quite common in the highlands. Another important genus is Demetrida which contains some 160 or so species. These are frequently encountered on the foliage of rain forest trees. Their colors vary from a green, with various shining reflections, to brown and black. They are not particularly large insects, being some 5–8 mm in length.
