

and valuable contribution to the debates on social and economic change in Indonesia and, because of the way it is conceptualized, to broader debates on modernity.

None the less, despite its episodic and thematic lucidity, the book as a whole is extraordinarily difficult to read. Part of the problem may be that Young is never entirely clear about the book's central question. In some places it seems that his major concern is to explain the 1908 rebellion; in others, the focus is on the wider and much more complicated context of social and economic change. In the end, the latter fails satisfactorily to inform the former, and one gets a sense that everything is so complex and interrelated, that everything needs so much to be hedged about with qualifications, that generalized assertions about the causes of the rebellion become impossible. The infelicities of style into which Young sometimes descends ('typification and classification are of limited use, as they tend to restrict understanding to typologies abstracted from the immediate phenomenal manifestation of social structures and processes', p. 28) compound the problem, as does the (inexcusable) absence of an index to help the reader through the text's tortuous terrain. Narrative history has its shortcomings, among them its artificially seriatim conflation of time and change, but it remains the best way of telling stories like the one Young wants to tell.

FRANCIS T. SEOW: To catch a Tartar: a dissident in Lee Kuan Yew's prison. (Yale Southeast Asia Studies/Monograph 42.) xxxiii, 293 pp. New Haven: Yale Southeast Asia Studies, Yale Center for International and Area Studies, 1994.

Between 1986 and 1988, Singapore became, unusually, a politically exciting place as the full weight of the government was brought to bear against an incongruous mixture of dissidence and alleged conspiracy. The Law Society was chastised for its temerity in challenging legislation enabling harsh penalties to be imposed on the foreign press for interfering in the domestic politics of the island-state. More alarming, a plot was revealed which implicated Catholic social workers in an attempt to transform Singapore into a classless society along Marxist lines. Finally, an American diplomat was expelled after being accused of seeking to promote and fund political opposition to the ruling People's Action Party.

Francis Seow, a legal practitioner and one-time Solicitor General of Singapore, was involved in one way or another with all three interconnected episodes. He was President of the Law Society, he defended two of the so-called Marxist plotters detained under the Internal Security Act, and he was himself detained on the grounds of having being suborned by the expelled diplomat and in seeking to solicit support from a foreign power for his political ambitions. This book is Francis Seow's personal testimony, written from exile in the United States, of the background to and circumstances of his own arrest and detention, and also of the attempt by the government of Singapore to prevent his election to Parliament, and then his occupying a 'nonconstituency' seat for which he was eligible as a close loser in the 1988 polls. It is a nasty tale replete with incidents of malice and petty spite on the part of his antagonists in government and in the Internal Security Department, as well as being illustrative of the workings of the rule of law in Singapore. The interrogation which he experienced in Whitely Detention Centre and which he describes in great detail was not exactly a form of torture by many standards, but it came quite close. In Singapore, keeping a detainee standing for hours on end without sleep and adequate nutrition wearing only sparse clothing in a freezing cold room under blinding lights is justified as a necessary psychological 'softening up'. And in the event, Seow provided a suitable statutory declaration which vindicated his detention and the expulsion of the American diplomat.

Francis Seow tells his side of the story against the government's attempt to traduce his reputation on the grounds of lapses in his personal probity and professional conduct. His book is of interest beyond the minutiae of Singapore's system of preventive detention and the malign practices of its political masters. It fills in from a personal perspective some of the detail of a fascinating and bizarre period in Singapore's politics which would seem to be explainable only in terms of a determination by the government to expunge all credible opposition in advance of Lee Kuan Yew's historic decision to step aside as Prime Minister in favour of his deputy Goh Chok Tong.

L. E. VISSER (ed.): Halmahera and beyond: social science research in the Moluccas. (Koninklijk Instituut voor Taal-, Land en Volkenkunde Proceedings, 1.) vi, 249 pp. Leiden: KITLV Press, 1994. Guilders 45, $29.50.

The articles in this book derive from the fifth International Workshop on Indonesian Studies held at Leiden in 1990, which brought together participants in a co-operative Halmahera Research Project between the Indonesian Institute of Sciences (LIPI) and principally Dutch, but also Japanese and American, anthropologists. Other than the project, what links the articles is common reference to the Moluccas. For this reason, perhaps the most useful contribution is the 'Bibliography on Moluccan research since the 1980s' at the back of the book. It is preceded by a chapter on the research project and regional development and by a note on social science research policy. The rest of the book is ethnographic or historical.

Lapian is mostly concerned with toponyms in his 'Bacan and the early history of North Maluku', while van Fraassen explores the nature of the political ties between Ternate and the 72 dependencies it once claimed. Baker

A Demographic History of the Indonesian Archipelago H. Gooszen, 2021-12-06 The author offers a reconstruction of regional variations in the growth of the indigenous population of Indonesia from 1880 till the Japanese invasion in 1942 The demographic components of population growth migration fertility and mortality are not only presented as demographic statistics but also interpreted as the aggregate effects of major events in the lives of indigenous people Hence migration is described in relation to employment opportunities the social structure and tradition fertility is examined in the light of aspects of family formation including marriage customs and birth control practices and mortality is linked to epidemics and Western health care

Nuauulu Religious Practices Roy F. Ellen, 2012-01-01 How religious practices are reproduced has become a major theoretical issue This work examines data on Nuauulu ritual performances collected over a 30 year period comparing different categories of event in terms of frequency and periodicity It seeks to identify the influencing factors and the consequences for continuity Such an approach enables a focus on related issues variation in performance how rituals change in relation to material and social conditions the connections between different ritual types the way these interact as cycles and the extent to which fidelity of transmission is underpinned by a common model or repertoire of elements This monograph brings to completion a long term study of the religious behaviour of the Nuaulu a people of the island of Seram in the Indonesian province of Maluku Ethnographically it is important for several reasons the Nuaulu are one of the few animist societies remaining on Seram the data emphasize patterns of practices in a part of Indonesia where studies have hitherto been more concerned with meaning and symbolic classification and because Nuaulu live in an area where recent political tension has been between Christians and Muslims Nuaulu are paradoxically both caught between these two groups and apart from them Living Kinship in the Pacific Christina Toren, Simonne Pauwels, 2015-04-01 Unaisi Nabobo Baba observed that for the various peoples of the Pacific kinship is generally understood as knowledge that counts It is with this observation that this volume begins and it continues with a straightforward objective to provide case studies of Pacific kinship In doing so contributors share an understanding of kinship as a lived and living dimension of contemporary human lives in an area where deep historical links provide for close and useful comparison The ethnographic focus is on transformation and continuity over time in Fiji Tonga and Samoa with the addition of three instructive cases from Tokelau Papua New Guinea and Taiwan The book ends with an account of how kinship is constituted in day to day ritual and ritualized behavior Kinship, population and social reproduction in the 'new Indonesia' Roy Ellen, 2018-05-16 Nuaulu people on the Indonesian island of Seram have displayed remarkable linguistic and cultural resilience over a period of 50 years In 1970 their language and traditional culture was widely considered endangered Despite this Nuaulu have not only maintained their animist identity and shown a robust ability to reproduce traditional ritual performances but have exhibited both population growth and increasing assertiveness in the projection of their interests through the politics of the New Indonesia This book examines how kinship organization and marriage patterns have responded to some of these challenges and suggests that the retention of core institutions of descent and exchange are the consequence of population growth which in turn has enabled ritual reproduction and thereby effectively maintained a distinct identity in relation to the surrounding majority culture Low conversion rates to other religions and the political consequences of Indonesian reformasi have also contributed to a situation in which despite changes in the material basis of their lives Nuaulu have projected a strong independent identity and organisation In terms of debates around kinship in eastern Indonesia this book argues that older notions of prescriptive social structure are fundamentally flawed Kinship institutions are real enough but the distinction between genealogical and classificatory relations is often unimportant all that matters in the end is that the arrangements entered into between clans and houses permit both biological and social reproduction and that the latter ultimately serves the former An important contribution to the study of the peoples of Eastern Indonesia it highlights a good news story about the successful retention of a traditional way of life in an area that has had a troubled recent history It will be of interest to academics in various fields of anthropology in particular the study of kinship and Southeast Asian societies The Forest of Taboos Valerio Valeri, 2000

The Forest of Taboos may be considered among the most important books ever written by an anthropologist Valeri writes superbly and this book makes a fundamental contribution to one of the most central lines of thought in twentieth century anthropology He shows that taboo is finally comprehensible John Stephen Lansing University of Michigan The Forest of Taboos is no conventional ethnography more an extended meditative essay on its subject erudite rich in ideas and data wide ranging in its theoretical inspiration and self consciously literary in form It is a fitting memorial to an author whose life was so tragically cut short Roy Ellen University of Kent at Canterbury This eloquent and profound book completed by Valerio Valeri shortly before his death in 1998 contends that the ambivalence felt by all humans about sex death and eating other animals can be explained by a set of coordinated principles that are expressed in taboos In elegant prose Valeri evokes the world of the Huauilu forest hunters of Indonesia The hidden attractions of the animal world which invades the human world in perilous ways he shows also delineate that which the Huauilu regard as most human about themselves Endangered

Reworking Culture Erik de Maaker, 2022-01-19 Reworking Culture Relatedness Rites and Resources in Garo Hills North East India provides intimate insights into the lives of Garo hill farmers and the challenges they face in day to day life Focusing on the ongoing reinterpretation of traditions or customs the book reveals the inadequacy of the all too often assumed characterization of upland societies as culturally homogenous internally cohesive and unchanging Based on extensive ethnographic fieldwork the book focuses on a rural area where land constitutes the most important resource and where a substantial number of people practise traditional Garo animism The book explores how people create and continually reinterpret the multiple relationships that connect them as a community to the spirits and to the land These relationships are embedded in normative frameworks that call for compliance yet leave room for ambiguity and negotiation Far from being immutable these need to be constantly expressed re interpreted and enacted The book thus shows how Garo traditions referred to as niam are continuously revised and reworked in response to new economic and political opportunities as well as to changes in the ontological landscape How Kinship Systems Change Robert Parkin, 2021-07-16 Using some of his landmark publications on kinship along with a new introduction chapter and conclusion Robert Parkin discusses here the changes in kinship terminologies and marriage practices as well as the dialectics between them The chapters also focus on a suggested trajectory linking South Asia and Europe and the specific question of the status of Crow Omaha systems The collection culminates in the argument that whereas marriage systems and practices seem infinitely varied when examined from a very close perspective the terminologies that accompany them are much more restricted

Marabout Women in Dakar Amber B. Gemmeke, 2008 This rich ethnographic study explores the life and work of successful marabout women in Dakar It is set against the background of their private family lives of developments in Senegalese society and of global changes While including female experts in spirit possession and plant based healing it also gives a rare insight in the work of women who offer Islamic knowledge such as Arabic astrology numerology divination and prayer sessions With the analysis of marabout women s work this study sheds light on the ways in which women s authority in esoteric knowledge is negotiated legitimated and publicly recognised in Dakar The study focuses especially upon marabout women s strategies to gain their clients trust Reference to rural areas is a significant element in this process This study thus contributes to an understanding of the gendered way in which trust and scepticism are related to marabouts work and of the role of a connection between Dakar and the rural areas therein Review of Indonesian and Malaysian Affairs ,1995 Atlas of Languages of Intercultural Communication in the Pacific, Asia, and the Americas Stephen A.
