

Hand, Foot, and Mouth Disease in Children

✓ Exclusively available on IvyPanda

Introduction

Hand, Foot, and Mouth disease is common in children under the age of 5. This disease is transmitted through an infected person's nose, mouth, or throat droplets (Jiang et al., 2021). It may be passed to others by direct contact or indirectly when people touch things with hand, foot, and mouth droplets on them, such as sharing food utensils, playing with toys that someone with HFM has touched, and coughing or sneezing on others. Hand, Foot, and Mouth disease can affect anyone due to its contagious nature.

The incidence rate of HFM in children under five was found in the Rural Health Information Hub. Using CDC's Epicurve Excel Spreadsheet, I plotted a graph and calculated the incubation period from the graph. The Epi curve is shown in Excel Spreadsheet, where it is evident that there are peaks during February and March, which are when HFM is most commonly transmitted.

Response to the Given Questions

There is an increase in the number of confirmed cases, and the curve has a steep slope. This increase in cases over time is common with most infectious diseases, especially those spread person-to-person.

The incubation period is the time from exposure to the onset of symptoms. This disease has an incubation period of nine days from exposure to onset of symptoms, ranging from four-28 days. However, the incubation period of this disease cannot be determined in real life because it is not constant and varies from person to person depending on factors such as the individual's age, duration from possible exposure to getting sick, immune system status, and more. Incidence Rate: 0 Per 100,000 Populations (Saguil et al., 2018). The case is very rampant when one person is infected and mingles with others.
