

STRIPPING

Always check and make sure the pistol is cleared first. This must be done whenever the pistol is handled; it takes only a moment. Point the muzzle in a safe direction and open the action by pulling the slide to the rear. When the action is fully open, check that there is no round in the breech, or in the chamber.

Excessive and repetitive stripping and any cleaning with abrasive material will wear components unnecessarily and is to be avoided.

FIELD STRIPPING & ASSEMBLY

Parts should be removed and replaced in the order as described. Groups and parts, when removed, should be placed on a clean, flat surface and care observed so as to prevent loss of any screws and small parts.

The pistol is stripped into five basic assemblies for normal cleaning and servicing, without the need for any tools. Additional stripping for repair or replacement of component parts should be done by armourers.

Remove the magazine

Press in the magazine catch with the right thumb as shown, in order to release the magazine from its housing in the frame. Then withdraw the magazine from the housing by grasping the floorplate top.
