C. Little,W. Castle,2015-07-07 Dr Castle s paper treats of an ancestral or atavistic coat character of the guinea pig present in most wild rodents but frequently absent in their tame varieties and which may be obtained by crossing certain domesticated varieties of guinea pig A full account is given of how the reversion in question may be secured how its reappearance can be accounted for and in what way the recovered character may be fixed or reestablished as a racial character together with the complete data which form the basis of this account Dr Little analyzes the observed phenomena of color inheritance in mice on the basis of Mendelian heredity and shows the relations of the various factors involved in the production of colors to each other and to the coat and eye colors produced The paper includes the analysis and description of the color factors and gives the experimental data on which the conclusions are based Classified First of Publications of the Carnegie Institution of Washington 1918 The Coat Colors of Mice W.K. Silvers,2012-12-06 Many investigators seem to be fascinated by the coat colors of the mam mals with which they work This seems to be the case particularly for those utilizing isogenic strains of mice not only because such strains display widely different phenotypes but because scientists by definition are an inquisitive lot and it is sometimes difficult for the uninitiated to comprehend how such phenotypes are produced. This bewilderment becomes even more apparent if the investigator happens to be involved in breeding studies and a number of attractively colored animals quite different from the original stocks appear. Thus I can recall numerous occasions when my colleagues frequently working in areas completely unrelated to any aspect of genetics have come to me with an attractively pigmented animal or more likely with a population of segregating coat color types usually because they have not tended their animals properly and have ended up with a cage full of F₂S displaying a number of different colors. How they ask do such colors come about. While in some cases it is easy to take chalk in hand and explain what has been going on segregating and why in other cases it is virtually impossible. It is extremely difficult because while the interactions of many coat color factors obey the simple laws of heredity and of predictable gene interactions others do not.
