Brooks, 1955      Women of the Industrial Revolution Layla Gupta, Before the sweeping changes of the Industrial Revolution the lives of women were deeply intertwined with traditional societal roles where gender determined not only daily routines but also the boundaries of influence and power In pre industrial societies the majority of women's lives revolved around the home where they were primarily responsible for managing household duties raising children and supporting agricultural production. Their roles were largely seen as supplementary to the labor of men who dominated public and economic spheres. This chapter explores the various dimensions of women's lives before industrialization examining their domestic responsibilities economic contributions and limited opportunities for independence. In agricultural communities women's work was often physically demanding and essential for the survival of the family. Women participated in tasks such as milking cows harvesting crops weaving textiles and preserving food. These activities though vital were not always recognized as economic labor in the traditional sense. Their contributions were seen as part of the household and thus considered separate from the more formal public forms of work that men engaged in. Women also played key roles in the production of textiles especially in the context of the cottage industry where they wove fabric spun thread and created garments. While often unpaid these activities contributed significantly to the local economy and provided women with a sense of agency within the confines of their homes.
